Bluefields Bay Villas

By John McEuen

Needing a place where quiet was part of the atmosphere – along with sand and sun – Jamaica easily comes to mind. I have loved my few trips there, but in getting ready for 2012 and what looks to be the best year in my show biz career, I needed a place to fizz and let the bubbles of 2011 go away. It was found in a smaller resort called Bluefield Bay Villas, about 50 minutes from Montego Bay airport in Westmoreland Parish.

The view, the room, the atmosphere were all the things one dreams of for a personal paradise and a place to sleep in it without being overrun by critters. I admit, though I LOVE that jungle/beach tropical combination, I don't like certain crawling bugs looking forward to having me over for dinner. They must have gone somewhere else, or that friendly gecko took care of any, for I never saw one.

Comprised of little villas, each with their own pool, what you see in the brochure looks like it is going to cost you a lot more than imagined. It is also more than imagined, as what you don't get on the internet or photos is the sound of the ocean and breeze in the trees. It is one of the nice deals I have encountered on this island paradise, and akin to Maui 25 years ago, before being overrun by corporate commercial cookie-cutter resorts. This is a special one of a kind cookie treat of a resort, with everything one wants or needs for a get away life, including not being overrun with people.

You feel like a new resident of the island, but somehow have won a local lottery that gives you all the attentions you would like right when you need them. That Jamaicans make a lot of income from tourism is evident by how well they treat their customers, as it is apparent they want you to return and do what they can to make that happen. I was told 80% of the Villas business is return visitors. Only 3 1/2 non-stop hours from New York, you find this area matching some rare beaches I have seen (Costa Rica's Tulemar, or Manuel Antonio, Puerto Rico, and certain Hawaiian spots), and but unlike some of those, I never saw it crowded.

Besides each villa having its own anchored floating sun raft, deck chairs at the ocean's edge, hammock, pool, there is also a butler... and a chef who takes care of other needs you might have on the spot.
